Disabling Professions (Ideas In Progress)
Synopsis

A controversial collection of essays by Ivan Illich, Irving K. Zola, John McKnight, Jonathan Caplan and Harley Shaiken in which they challenge the power and mystery of the professions, medicine, education and the law.

Book Information

Series: Ideas in Progress (Book 1)
Paperback: 128 pages
Publisher: Marion Boyars Publishers Ltd (July 1, 2000)
Language: English
ISBN-10: 0714525103
Product Dimensions: 5 x 0.3 x 7.7 inches
Shipping Weight: 6.7 ounces (View shipping rates and policies)
Average Customer Review: 4.8 out of 5 stars â See all reviews (5 customer reviews)
Best Sellers Rank: #900,147 in Books (See Top 100 in Books)  #114 in Medical Books > Medicine > Internal Medicine > Occupational  #479 in Books > Politics & Social Sciences > Social Sciences > Specific Demographics > Disabled  #1607 in Medical Books > Administration & Medicine Economics > Public Health

Customer Reviews

This book basically sums up the problem with psychiatry, social work, law and welfare. Essentially people have to be sick in order for someone to treat them, ergo, people must be invalidated in order for someone to gain employment as a "professional". Law essentially becomes the domain of people that use their socially created "authority" to impose judgement or justice upon those that they deem undesireable to the community. Rather than becoming a means for resolution of disputes, the system gets used to invalidate people so a profesional workforce can maintain class construction. Without a separet system of experts people would gain autonomy over their own lives, such as birth, death, care, etc. Most incidences of these categories have been taken over by a medical abstraction based system that often creates more iatrogenic outcomes. People become overmedicalized, lose authority over their lives and are forced through law and medicine to turn over responsibility of their lives to experts more capable of treating "diseases" when in my opinion the whole enterprise seems a reentrenchment of "religious" control with "scientific" control, aka eugenics. These professionals create needs in the people that gain degrees in these disabling professions to legislate political outcomes not, I repeat, not based on sound scientific basis, but mere professional or moral judgement, a modern version would be drugging of children on psychiatric drugs, redefining most behaviors of youth as abnormal, which come to represent a moral movement instead of a scientific movement to control people, but using the cover of science to persuade people to submit.

Download to continue reading...